

Dynamical Systems Innovation Lab, July 8-12, 2013

Stephen Gray

Stephen is an international affairs professional whose work includes mediation, research and analysis, and professional service to organizations involved in international peace and security. His research work focuses on systemic approaches to conflict analysis and transformation, and seeks to build bridges between theoretical understanding and practical applications. On a more hands on level, he works as a volunteer mediator in community settings. As a consultant, he provides advice and professional support to organizations involved in peace and security issues working in the United States and internationally. His capabilities are rooted in previous experience as a public sector consultant and government official in New Zealand, complemented by advanced training in international conflict resolution. Specialties: Research and analysis (academic and policy), public and private consultancy, monitoring and evaluation, project management, writing and editing, negotiation, training, mediation and conflict resolution.

Source: <http://www.linkedin.com>